Generating a Story Idea

Generating a Story Idea 1
Introduction 3
You'll Need… 3
Getting Started 3
Step 1: Choose a Genre 3
Step 2: Make a Protagonist 3
Step 3: Choose a Setting 4
Step 4: Create a Conflict 4
Step 5: Shape the Conflict 5
Step 6: Shape the Protagonist's Response to the Conflict 5
Step 7: Write a One-Sentence Premise 5

Introduction

An idea for a story is the same as air to one's lungs. You need air to survive, and a story needs an idea to even come into existence.

An idea for a story is what creates the world that your characters live and breathe in. It sets the stage for the plot to flow and for the characters to grow. It even helps to create the foundations of the world itself, its laws, its physics, its cultures, its entire being.

You'll Need…

- Any kind of tool that allows you to write and organize your ideas. It could be something like a pen and paper, a notepad, or a whiteboard. It could also be computerized; Microsoft Word or Google Docs will work too.

Getting Started

Step 1: Choose a Genre

This can be something like sci-fi, historical fiction, drama, fantasy, noir, stone-age, etc. It can also be a combination, too.

Step 2: Make a Protagonist

Think of someone that the story will revolve around. You'll also want to look at aspects of the character, too, such as their age, role, or unique traits that separate them from others.

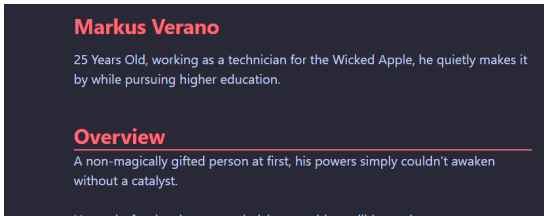

Figure 1. A screenshot from Obsidian.md, depicting a protagonist from the book I'm working on. Source: Brian Nguyen

Step 3: Choose a Setting

A setting is where and when a story will take place. You'll be considering 2 factors: the time period, such as the Victorian Era or the Dark Ages, and the location, Britain, India, Nigeria, etc.

In addition, you'll want to consider that if you're writing genres with specific time frames, like medieval, the setting will typically be in the past, such as the Dark Ages. However, this is more a recommendation than a requirement.

Step 4: Create a Conflict

A conflict is what will drive the story into motion and make characters act. It is a series of events that will make the protagonist act to either overcome it or defeat it in some manner. It also serves to create tension or cause chaos in the story.

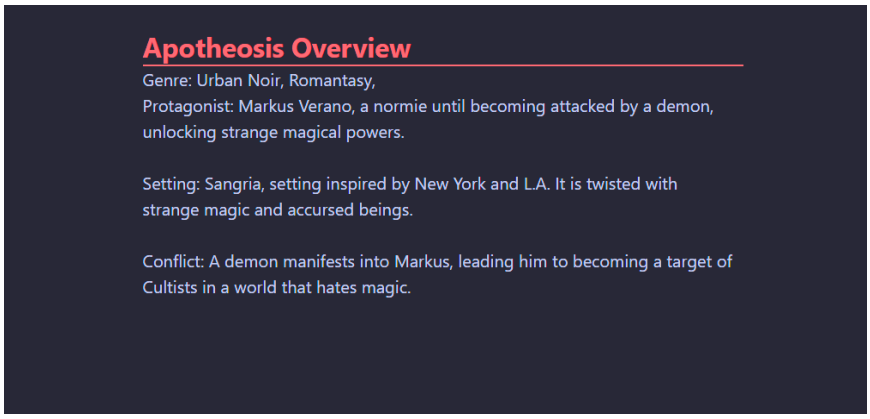

Figure 2. A screenshot from Obsidian.md, an overview that encompasses the conflict, protagonist, and setting. Source. Brian Nguyen

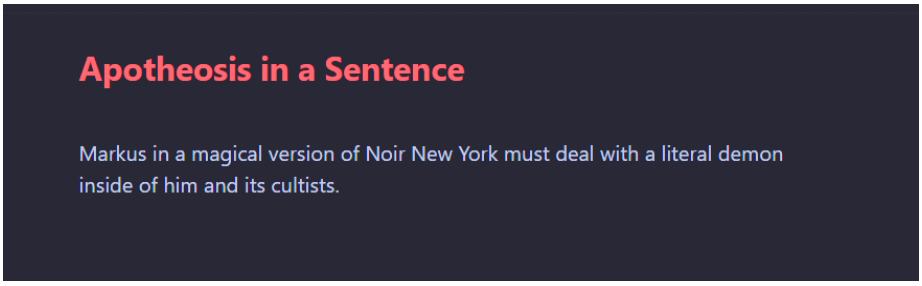
Step 5: Shape the Conflict

Begin creating how the conflict will be introduced to the story, how the conflict will grow, and how it will end.

Step 6: Shape the Protagonist's Response to the Conflict

Create how the Protagonist is introduced to the conflict, how they handle it, and how they fully resolve it.

Step 7: Write a One-Sentence Premise



Create a sentence that explains the setting, protagonist, and conflict. It should be able to explain your story.

Figure 3. A screenshot from Obsidian.md, depicting the one-sentence premise of Apotheosis. Source: Brian Nguyen

Definitions

Protagonist: The main character of the story.

Conflict: tension or a series of events that drives the story forward.

Genre: a category of artistic composition; a set of norms or conventions on a specific form of communication.